OVERVIEW

Rebecca Laird practices in the area of financial institutions law. Her clients are commercial banks, trust companies, savings banks, savings associations, and their holding companies. Her practice includes:

- representation of financial institutions before state and Federal bank and securities regulatory agencies, including: the Federal Reserve Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Securities and Exchange Commission;
- counseling clients on mergers and acquisitions, interstate operations, trust operations, de novo charters, including limited purpose charters;
- advising clients on the sale, offering and design of deposit and investment products within a financial services company, including brokerage services, sweep accounts, private banking services, and mutual fund and insurance products;
- assisting clients in chartering federal or state-chartered trust companies, offering collective investment funds and other trust based services; and
- advising clients on providing new banking services which may involve bitcoin, blockchain, or cryptocurrencies.

PROFESSIONAL BACKGROUND

Prior to joining the firm, Rebecca was General Counsel of the National Council of Savings Institutions, which represented over 600 savings banks and thrift institutions. Rebecca also served in the Office of General Counsel of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, where she had the position of Senior Associate General Counsel for Legislative and Regulatory Affairs.

Rebecca is a prior Chairman of the Savings Institutions Law Committee of the Federal Bar Association. She has authored a publication entitled Mutual Funds: A Handbook for Bankers. She was formerly Vice Chairman of the Banking Law Committee of the ABA Administrative Law Section.
