Rogers issued an Initial Determination finding: (i) Kodak did not infringe either of Apple's '911 or '964 Patents; (ii)

Apple's '911 Patent was invalid; and (ii) Apple lacked the required domestic industry for the '964 Patent. The International Trade Commission declined to review the Initial Determination. At the close of the evidentiary hearing ALJ Rogers commented: "If I were going to hold out a hearing for an example of how to go about this, it would be the one you just put on because you have saved a lot of time by avoiding unnecessary bickering and by focusing on what the real issues in the case were as opposed to going far afield. So thank you for that."
