OVERVIEW

James Jago is an associate in the firm's London office. He is a member of the Energy, Infrastructure and Resources practice group. James' focus is primarily on energy-related disputes. James has recent experience working on disputes in the upstream oil and gas sector, and the LNG and natural gas sector. James also has experience of advising on disputes in the construction sector.

James has been involved in arbitrations under the institutional rules of both the ICC and LCIA, and also has experience of litigating in the Technology and Construction Court.

PROFESSIONAL BACKGROUND

James completed his training contract at K&L Gates, gaining experience in the following practice groups: Real Estate, Investment Management, Investigations, Enforcement and White Collar, and Energy, Infrastructure and Resources.

Prior to joining the firm, James served as a legal product expert for an artificial intelligence platform that services the legal profession, where he also focused on sales and client relations. Additionally, James has experience as a former paralegal for a shipping law firm in London, as well as a multi-disciplinary law practice specializing in property and private client advice. James also worked at the in-house legal department for a global employee benefits network.
