OVERVIEW

Andrew Stephens is an associate in the firm's Kansas City office and a member of the Power practice group. His practice focuses primarily on the renewable energy sector, where he advises clients, drafts and coordinates relevant transactional documentation, and performs project-level analysis on the structuring of a variety of transactions, including acquisitions, joint ventures, tax equity financings, and other complex commercial arrangements involving wind and solar projects across the US. Andrew also advises energy clients on virtual power purchase arrangements for renewable energy facilities.

In addition to his energy practice, Andrew has experience representing manufacturing clients in a broad array of business and corporate matters, including drafting and negotiating long-term supply agreements and transportation contracts.

PROFESSIONAL BACKGROUND

Prior to joining the firm, Andrew served as an associate with a full-service firm based in Kansas, where he drafted aviation finance agreements and related leasing arrangements crucial to the representation of national and international financial institutions. In addition, Andrew performed due diligence and complex analysis for regional mergers and acquisitions transactions and advised clients in the organization and governance of new business entities.
